Harald Paul and wife return to Nain

A very familiar boat has broken its way through the ice in order to get to Nain yesterday.

Harald Paul and his wife Silvia are the boaters who had spent their entire winter season aboard the vessel.

Paul dropped by our studio this morning to talk about their adventure.

He says they were anchored approximately 30 kilometers north of Nain.

In an area near Webb's Bay.

Paul says the only troubles he faced was minor engine problems while breaking through the ice.

Now he has to do some minor paint touch-ups.

He says after that, they'll be sailing to Newfoundland.

But will return afterward.

Paul adds that once he returns to his homeland of Germany, a return to Nain would depend on his financial future.
